

the ARCHIBULL PRIZE

THE ARCHIBULL PRIZE 2017 CAREERS AWARD SAFFRON BUTLER

Winner of the primary school competition was 12-year-old Saffron Butler from Gwynneville Public School who envisaged a career as a high school agricultural teacher. “Many agricultural careers are either in an office or on a farm and I was looking for a happy medium and agricultural teaching was perfect for me,” she said. Saffron is looking forward to using her mini iPad to continue to study agriculture from home.

My future in agriculture

I am currently in year six at Gwynneville Public School. Next year when I am in high school I plan to study agricultural science, business, technology and horticulture.

Once I have finished high school I will go to Australian national university where I will attempt to get a masters degree in agricultural science. Then I will complete a teacher training program and a student teaching practicum.

I want to end up in teaching high school children about the importance and necessity of agriculture in their society. I believe that agriculture is the main building block in our world.
